

Reason for intermission - _____:

Circumstances with your partner, child or children, or other family members mean you need to devote more time to being with them.
The recent death of a family member or friend has affected you to a degree which means you cannot continue studying at this time.
You have found it difficult settling into life at the University.
You feel you are not yet ready for University.
Circumstances with a partner or friend(s) mean you cannot spend time on your studies as you might wish.
You feel you would prefer to be at home in familiar surroundings at the moment.
You are dealing with psychological or emotional issues which prevent you continuing with your studies at present.
Your physical condition currently prevents you from continuing with your studies.
In your opinion, circumstances in your private life are affected by behaviour which you regard as intolerable and detrimental to continued study.
You, or someone close to you, has been involved in an incident which has affected your studies and continuing as a student is not possible at the moment.
You are able to take advantage of a job opportunity which requires the time away from the University.
A change in your working life means that continuation of study is not possible at this time
Lack of funds or change in funding situation
You want to spend some time travelling.
Problems with my accommodation have significantly disrupted my studies.
Your degree course is not as you expected it to be.
The University as a whole, its facilities and atmosphere is not suitable for you.

You have realised you are on the wrong course and wish to transfer or take the time to consider your options.
---	--

You feel that the University has not, or cannot, provide for your disability.

In addition to the supervisor comments above, please provide a statement to support the student's exceptional intermission application and to confirm your involvement in the School's plan of academic and pastoral support:

I confirm that I have considered the reason for this intermission and I recommend the intermission for the period stated above.
